A Message From The Tax Department Editor

Tax Department of The Woman CPA is a forum for readers to share their knowledge and expertise in taxation. Many of you research tax topics when preparing tax returns for clients and employers, and The Woman CPA would like for you to share that research. For example, have you relied on a recent tax case or revenue ruling and feel discovered an unintended result or a trap for the unwary in one of the new code sections that you think others should know about? Or are there techniques you use in tax planning that you think could be useful to our readers?

If you have never submitted anything for publication, let me briefly review how you should begin. First, make sure your idea is original and one that would be of interest to our readers. Next, outline what you want to say. After you have put your thoughts in a logical order, write your manuscript using your outline as your guide. If what you have written is ten pages or less (double spaced), send it to me for consideration. (If your paper is longer, you may want to consider submitting it for publication as a main article, and in that case, your manuscript should be sent to Dr. Betty Brown, Associate Editor of The Woman CPA.) I hope to receive articles from you soon.

readers could benefit from your experience? Or in complying with the many recent tax law changes, have you
